Dear Mrs. Newman,

I am writing to apply for an internship at the marketing department of Sunny Summer Camps.

As you can see from my résumé, I am currently majoring in Advertising and Marketing Communications. The program includes courses on media planning, consumer behavior, and advertising and communications strategy that are taught by highly-respected marketing professionals and have provided me with both valuable knowledge and many essential skills.

In addition to my marketing skills, I would also be able to offer your company some useful skills developed in the field of sports education. While in high school, I had the opportunity to coach one of the local junior soccer teams. The experience taught me some important lessons on how to interact and communicate with both children and parents that I believe could be of great value to your marketing department.

I could also bring with me some personal practical knowledge. I had the opportunity to go to different summer camps as a child and a teenager, and I can still remember what made each camp either a fabulous experience or a very bizarre one. It would be an honor to share my views with you and help make your customers' experience even more satisfying.

I would be available to work full-time from early June to late August and once a week from September on. I would also be able to work on some weekends if necessary.

I hope you will consider my application and give me the opportunity of an interview, when we could further discuss my experience and skills and how these could be of help to your company.

Sincerely,

Kenji Ohtani
